ABSTRACT Education is a crucial tool for shaping the beliefs and values of young people. Peace education, in particular, is vital to instil knowledge, skills, and attitudes that promote moral development among adolescents. This kind of education helps individuals distinguish between right and wrong in today's globalised world. Therefore, promoting peace education is essential for modernising society and moving individuals forward. The objective of the study is to find the relationship between peace education and the moral values of adolescents. To achieve this goal, the researcher employed qualitative, secondary research techniques, using the literature review method to analyse several previously published studies on the theme. The findings show that there is a strong, positive correlation between peace education and the moral values of adolescents. As such, the study recommends a comprehensive approach to peace education that can support positive moral values among young people in society.
