

Distance Learning

James A. Bitter and Robert J. Gregory

1. Rehabilitation Leadership Project, College of Business Administration, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, CO 80639 USA E-Mail: jabitte@bentley.unco.edu

2. *School of Psychology, Massey University, Palmerston North, New Zealand
E-Mail: R.J.Gregory@massey.ac.nz*

KEY WORDS: Distance; education; learning; information; communication; rehabilitation

ABSTRACT Distance learning focuses on the student and the processes or means and results of an educational program, as compared with the concept of distance education. A variety of distance learning programs, methods, and ideas are explored in this paper. Distance learning is particularly valuable for people with disability and accordingly, rehabilitation training programs have taken some leadership roles in this development.